

Suck UK retain trading partner and benefit from cutting-edge EDI

Design duo, Sam and Jude established Suck UK in 1999 after studying design at Central St Martins. Their reputation for mixing their sense of humour and style to create original and quirky products has earned them design awards, bespoke projects and has made Suck UK what it is today. They now supply to thousands of retailers worldwide, from independent boutiques to department stores and supermarkets.

What did they want to achieve?

One of Suck UK's major customers asked them to start trading electronically and recommended an EDI provider to them.

"One of our major customers requested that we communicated via EDI. They recommended an EDI provider to us. We contacted both the recommended provider and NetEDI to get comparative quotes", stated Sam, Suck UK,

Managing Director. "NetEDI demonstrated a thorough understanding of our requirements and came in under the price we were quoted from the recommended provider."

Suck UK were using Access Dimensions as their back-office system and needed an EDI solution that could be directly integrated.

"We didn't want to cause ourselves more work, just to accommodate a major client's request to trade electronically, so we needed an EDI system that would integrate directly into Dimensions."

They didn't have any in-house EDI knowledge themselves so were looking for an EDI provider who could provide a trusted, fully managed service.

"We're grateful that NetEDI's NeTIX service handles this for us. I would have no hesitation in recommending NetEDI to anyone looking for an EDI provider."

Our solution for Suck UK

We implemented our NeTIX Professional solution for Suck UK and integrated directly into Access Dimensions, using both Web Services and a standard export routine from Dimensions.

NeTIX handles all the communications with external parties and translates incoming and outgoing data in the cloud. Utilising the Dimension Web Service enabled a direct connection between NeTIX and Dimension to be implemented.

This means that Suck UK get full visibility and can trace all their incoming orders.

NeTIX can communicate with any trading partner by multiple communication protocols, leaving Suck UK to concentrate on building their business.

"I am confident that NetEDI will continue to provide us with exceptional service and support as we look to expand our EDI operations and on-board new customers onto the platform," Sam concludes.
